To be curious is to wonder. Wonder what might be hiding behind means understanding that everything around us is part of an in everything has a story behind it and nothing happens randomly little mystery. A mystery, unravelled only by employing the science is, Observe -> Hypothesize -> Test -> Learn -> Repeat.

Curiosity is not just about how something came to be. It's also a patterns. Part of being curious is having an eye out for hidden patterns actively look for patterns. Having an eye out for patterns means as meaningful, where meaningful => not random or intentional

Strong curiosity invokes a sense of mystery. This quote comes from *that no one had thought to let him in on a secret: "I was sudden world is incredibly interesting.
